MEMORANDUM

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

Saturday, April 4, 1964

This morning I spent with Lynda working on pictures, to complete a sort of montage to go above the mantlepice in her room.. , Heard how she'd had a really delightful time at the dance the night before, with the SANTIZED She danced every dance, had seen a lot of gay people, participated in just exactly the sort of life that a 20 year old ought to when living in the White House.

And the strings of frustration, bound a little tighter around me, recognizing that SANTIZED

Donald ~~Dreer~~ ^{Drayer} came over during the morning, my architect friend, to discuss turning the cabinet space in my combination dressing room and office, into something beautiful, rather than something that looks like it was run up in a temporary Army barracks in 24 hours.

Then I had lunch in my room and worked. And then went over to the bowling alley with Lynda Bird in the late afternoon, for a game and then we came back and watched the movie, Night Must Fall with Albert Finney. A deliciously scary suspense movie.

Let me not forget what luxury it is to sit in the comfortable overstuffed chair in the front row, with popcorn and a drink, watching a movie. If ever I object ^[to] shaking three thousand hands I hope I remember that I have
