					During the first leg of the trip, the President, Mrs. Johnson, and Luci visited with the members of congress mentioned above. He autographed -- for Senator Yarborough-- a copy of the day's schedule, showed every one aboard the pictures taken by Okamoto of Texas sights and areas. The President thdn went into the main cabin of the plane, and located Sgt Major Wooldridge and ushered him into his compartment and introduced him to all members of the Congress there. He then asked the Sgt Major to sit in his cabin for the rest of the flight.
	11:55a	EST			Arrive Weir ██████████ Cook Municipal Airport, INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA (While the notices of the advance men were that there would be no crowd at the airport, the President was surprised to find at least 500 people there awaiting his arrival) After greeting the Reception Committee, the President and Mrs. Johnson separated, and walked along the fence ██████████ greeting the crowd. 	12:15p				The helicopters arrived in a large parking lot area where a crowd of 500 had gathered. The President waved at the crowd and entered his car.
	12:18p				Presidential motorcade departed the parking lot Area en route to Indianapolis Circle. In the President's car were Governor and Mrs. Branigin, Senator Bayh, Senator Hartke, Cong. Jacobs. The five block motorcade route was lined with people, and the welcome was warm.
	12:22p	EST			Arrive Indianapolis Circle (The circle is in fact a true physical circle. Set in downtown Indianapolis, it has been recently sand blasted, and situated in its center is a monument to Indiana's war dead.) A platform was set up at the foot of the steps of the monument, and the President and party proceeded to the platform. "Hail to the Chief" was played, and while the National Anthem was played, a riot of balloons was released from the top of one of the buildings around the circle. Police estimated the crowd to be 30,000. At the front of the crowd was a group of Job Corps volunteers who applauded enthusiastically.
Four bands were playing, among them the Culver Drum and Bugle Corps-- Sen Bayh's 10 year old son, is a student at Culver this summer.					After dignitaries were introduced, the President made his

					Indiana men present that he had cleared the man for the job, that it was hard to get an outsider into a post like this instead of bringing someone up from the ranks, and then when he gives it to the man, the man slaps his face. Senator Bayh assured him that there was a misunderstanding, and that the man was given the impression by DOS officials that the job carried with it a lot of CIA intrigue, and was not something that he-- a big businessman-- could handle.

About 100 anti VietNam pickets were outside the Athletic Club, but were not in view of the President on his arrival or departure.

					The President received honorary membership in the 101st Airborne Division -- a framed citation and a pin, from General Sternberg.
					The President received honors, 21 gun salute, ruffles and flourishes, "Hail to the Chief." He then proceeded with General Sternberg and Sgt Major Wooldridge to review 80 VietNam returnees who made up the honor guard at the dismount point of the airplane. The troops were in battle dress.
					He entered his car, and accompanied by General Sternberg, Sgt Major Wooldridge and Governor Breathitt, drove for about 1/4 mile to the demonstration site. He departed his car and went into the crowd of civilians behind the fence (the base had been opened to civilians for this event) and shook hands for about 3-4 minutes. He then went to the stand and took his place to watch the demonstration of a helicopter assault. The demonstration lasted 15 minutes. At the end of the demonstration, a helicopter pilot, Captain Robin Miller ran up to the President to report to him and then took him and showed him an armed Huey helicopter similar to the one that Captain Miller has been flying in VietNam. Captain Miller explained the weaponry of the helicopter to the President. They posed for photographers. Then escorted by General Sternberg, the President went to a table where there were some captured Viet Cong weapons. There, a sergeant explained to the President the operations of some of the weapons. The President then again entered his car and drove about 150 yards where the entire 101st Airborne Division was in formation -- 8200 men. In an open jeep -- in pouring rain (For the first time in several years, Paul Glynn had forgotten to bring the President's raincoat, so a plastic raincoat was borrowed from a secret service man for the President's use.) and accompanied by General Sternberg and Sgt Major Wooldridge the President reviewed the 101st Airborne Division. Returning to the stand, he presented medals to about 20 VietNam returnees -- 1 Silver Star, 8 purple hearts, 10 bronze stars, 4 air medals, and three commendation ribbons. He then walked up a slight incline to the speakers platform. General Sternberg introduced the Governor and then the Governor introduced the President for his
					Immediately after his remarks he moved off the platform to his left where he met and spoke individually to about 15 wounded VietNam returnees in wheel chairs (the rain had stopped).
					General Sternberg pointed out that a cake had been made for the President, and the President cut a huge slice and took a big bite for himself, and then passed it to Luci and Mrs. Johnson.
					Just before getting into his car, the President walked to a group of men (those who had given the helicopter assault demonstration) and shook hands with them saying, "I'm proud of you and you're doing a good job."

					And the President walked up the steps of the George Rogers Clark Memorial. (later to sign bill making this a [REDACTED] national historic site) He went on the platform and waved to a crowd of over 50,000 people. The President was so impressed with the large number of people he asked Merriman Smith to come to the platform and stand on it to see the large, large crowd. After being introduced by Governor Branigin, the President made
	6:35p	6:55p			REMARKS
	6:56p				SIGNING CEREMONY for the George Rogers Clark Memorial Bill -- changing the Memorial from a state memorial to a national memorial - H.R. 9599
The desk used by the President in signing this bill was used by William Henry Harrison. It usually rests in Indiana Territorial Hall, but was moved to the signing site for this occasion. It was at this desk that Gov Harrison sat facing the Territorial Judges, and from this desk on Dec 5, [REDACTED] 1804, Harrison issued a proclamation which established the [REDACTED] second of the Democratic phases of the territorial government.					(an amusing anecdote: Cong. Denton was introducing the dignitaries on the platform, and introduced Senator Ralph Yarborough from Texas. The Senator was not on the platform, and the Congressman said, "I don't know if it's possible to lose a Senator From Texas, but it appears we've done it." Senator Yarborough arrived while the President was speaking and told mf and JJ the following story. While hurrying to the cars, he bent under a rope, and [REDACTED] split his right front pants leg about 14 inches down the crease. He said that he knocked on the doors of several houses nearby trying to find some ^{one} at home, as he watched the motorcade proceed out of sight, and finally came to a house where two old ladies were standing on the porch. He asked them if they could help him--just give him a needle and thread -- anything, and they hesitatingly sewed up his pants for him. After they finished, he said he felt he had to tell them who he was, and they were flabbergasted to find that they had sewn up the pants of a U.S. Senator. This is the story as told by the Senator himself in contrast to reports in the press that the Senator was locked in the bathroom of the airplane.)
The audience was large--and colorful. Much of the audience was in colonial dress required for attendance at the Sesqui-centennial Celebration and Parade in Jasper, Indiana, just sixty miles. Many of					the audience had attended festivities in Jasper and then driven to Vincennes.
