Advisory Commission on Information Presented their 22nd annual report assessing the operations of the USIA and proposing recommendations for its future. Members of the commission and the staff director inspected USIA activities in 17 nations during 1966. The commission held 10 meetings during the past year. The commission finds four areas in which challenges to USIA are paramount: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. The continued domestic problems of mainland China, including its internal upheaval.</li> <li>2. The President's call for "peaceful engagement" with the USSR and Eastern Europe.</li> <li>3. The continued unification of Western Europe</li> <li>4. The rise of a new generation which constitutes new audiences with different memories, new expectations and with changing concepts of the U. S. and what it stands for.</li> </ol> In this rpt, the commission commends the present administration of USIA in its efforts to improve and modernize its management and has identified certain continuing problems and new opportunities.
