					The President read the morning papers and generally just talked about his day. He said that he wanted to take a ride very soon and see "the deer jump and play," and then come back for an early lunch, take a nap and then go to Austin for the unveiling of the bust of Tom Miller at the Municipal Auditorium. He then told Mrs. Johnson that the thing which endeared Tom Miller to him so very much was "his kindness, his gentlemanly like conduct, his courtly manner, when dealing with my wife and my mother." The President said that while he was in the service Tom Miller would spend his time saying good things about his wife and how she was running his office, and that he always thought of the President's mother. "Tom Miller himself would come by and deliver her a ticket to a reception," said the President.
