

Lyndendear, it must have cost an awful lot to call me in the middle of the day - and it was a person-to-person call too - but oh it did me so much good!
 Thank you, dearest. It made everything all right again. But I want to know all about this business in South Texas, if I may. Of course I won't talk about it to anyone, if its that sort of business. But if its something that's worrying you, dear,
 I want to know about it.

Lyndon, just what sort of an offer is it Mr. Adams is making you? Could you continue studying law or it would it demand your whole time?

BIRD TAYLOR

Monday Morning

My darling -

I do write you at the funniest times! Its hardly seven yet.
 I got up at six because a man is coming to trim the trees at seven.
 And I've been up the road to get a colored man to help him, and have come home, and had breakfast and am just finishing with a cup of coffee, and you.

I'd quite forgotten how lovely it is in the early morning! About sun-up its so misty and pink and blue and dewy, riding across the fields.

I'm so sorry ^{you} were feeling bad last week, my dear. But it's no wonder - you have so many important things to deal with and decide about. You're one young man whose not concerned with unemployment, at least! ... I wish I could talk to you and hear all about them - the South Texas deal and the New York business. Of course, I wouldn't know what to do - which doesn't lessen my interest and concern, and my wanting to help.

Darling, everybody - Laura, Rachel, and Doris and Hugh were as much excited over the call yesterday as me. - You see they were all hunting for me!

You mustn't call again for ages because that one cost so much but I'm so glad you did, this once, anyway. It changed the complexion of things and "brought back the sun"! Now I can work all week and not mind the constant minor irritations and disappointments that pop up during the day because I'll have something so pleasant to fall back on.

I hope you have not torn up the sweet letter you mentioned. I shall look for it tomorrow!!

Goodbye, love, until tonight or tomorrow morning. Devotedly, (and much relieved and happier!) Bird.
