to anyone every day and I thought it most absurd! And now I find myself looking forward to the time of day when I write you. It's the nicest time of day except around eleven o'clock when I go down after the mail - yours usually comes on that train.

Today I took Isabel and Nig and Fanky and Lilly Floyd to the Fair. They were as tickled over it as I'd be over seeing Broadway! While they were there I went to see Somerset Maugham's
"Of Human Bondage". It was skilfully played but quite harrowing.
Dear, when it comes and you've time I want you to see "The World

Dearest!

No letter today! I am so disappointed. I wonder why you didn't write? Are you too busy - or have you perhaps already left for Texas - or why?
I had no idea how peculiarly empty a day would be without a letter from you. If you miss a letter from me as much as I do yours - I'll make sure you get one everyday!

When I think that I said I wouldn't write every day I am quite amused. I meant it most certainly - I'd never written

"Moues On." I remember you don't like shawls but I'm sure you'll like this one. The love-making is in ^{the} most flawless good taste I've ever seen on the screen. It made me ^{feel} very set-up about the human race to watch them.

The books came today and I am delighted! I shall begin one tonight. They are library books, aren't they? Is the limit two weeks? I shall hurry! And thanks, dear.

But, Lyndau, the ~~clippings~~ ^{clippings} didn't come. Perhaps they will be waiting for me tomorrow when I go down. I shall look forward to it.

I've been reading "Early Autumn" and am enthralled.

If we were together I'd read it to you... There's nothing I like better than being comfortable in a nice cosy place and reading something amusing or well-written or interesting to someone I like. All good things are better shared, aren't they?

My Bachelor of Journalism degree came the other day and I've lost it! Fancy that! I am sorry - because I like President Benedict's signature, bless his heart, and ^(the diploma) it was a dear sort of souvenir from the Grandest Place on Earth. ... Anyway, I know what they look like!

My dear, do you know what today is? It's our Anniversary! A month ago today we met...
