EXCERPTS FROM MRS. LYNDON B. JOHNSON'S NOTES DURING PLANETARIUM FIELD TRIP FOLLOWING JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL VISIT, FOR USE AT SUNRISE CULTURAL CENTER, CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA

Like you, I'm on an educational field trip today; I'm visiting three states to learn about exciting new developments in our schools.

You know, we used to look up at the stars and think, "How tiny and insignificant they make man seem!" But today -- with every new satellite launching; with every new journey of men into space -- we can look at the stars and reflect: "What a long way man's quest for knowledge has led him for the stars are almost at our fingertips."

It's just possible that right here with us today, among the students of Woodrow Wilson Junior High, there is a future astronaut.
